- Q.1) Define polyploidy and explain its application with reference to medicinal plants.
- Q.2) Comment on nutritional requirements in plant tissue culture
- Q.3) Enlist applications of plant tissue culture in pharmacognosy.

2)

→ Plant tissue culture is the technique in which the explant and/or plant cells are cultured in vitro to produce specific organ or a complete plant. It may be noted that plants in nature can synthesize their own food material. However, plants growing in vitro are mainly heterotrophic, i.e. they cannot synthesize their own food. Thus, for multiplication and growth the plant cell requires a specific nutrient which is similar to the nutrient which is obtained during the normal plant growth.

The success of plant tissue culture is mainly dependent upon the composition of ~~nut~~ nutrient medium that is the nutrients supplied through culture media and environmental condition provided.

B Zeta potential :-
 Zeta potential is difference between tightly bounded layer & electroneutral
 layer
 Zeta potential = Tightly bounded layer - electroneutral layer
 Importance :-
 1) Zeta potential is a electrokinetics
 2) It is important for stability, absorption, therapy.

Q] Zeta potential:

The potential difference or difference in the potential between the tightly bound layer surface and the electroneutral region of the solution.

Values of zeta potential:

- i] Zeta potential governs the repulsive force between the ion of like charges.
- ii] Zeta potential decreases
- iii] The optimum zeta potential results in the stability of colloids.
